

Group Approaches

Updated
2021

Welcome!

Being part of a community coming together can be a delight. There can also be personal challenges and group dynamics that feel uncomfortable. It is important to set clear intentions and establish a sense of respect among our group members. This enables us to create a supportive environment for us all.

The following Group Approaches assist us to build a foundation of healthy communication and a way of being in our sessions. They can also be transferred into your relationships outside our course; such as family, work colleagues, community, friends.

Please familiarize yourself with our Group Approaches and consider if there's anything you'd like to add or discuss. We will be reviewing them in more detail when we meet.

Your time and attention is greatly appreciated!

Gord and Amber

gordandamber@gmail.com

BE MINDFUL of the talking piece and listen deeply. This approach is a gift to both the speaker AND the listener. Speakers are invited to hold the talking piece and share what is in their heart. Speakers can always pass on their turn and share silence. Listeners are given an opportunity to practice listening deeply which is a skill that does not always come easily. Notice how it feels to listen without interrupting the speaker. Listen to the space between words. Listen with all your senses, not just your hearing. Savour the experience of being in the company of others doing their best to speak from the heart and listen deeply.

BE AWARE of your tendency to over-share or under-share and contribute to our conversations with awareness. Allow space for silence and playfulness to emerge which are both natural and welcome. The various prompts and discussions may leave you feeling excited to participate in excess, or feeling timid and hesitating to speak up. When contributing to a conversation with awareness, you share what is alive for you in the moment and the message is clear and concise. This way everyone's wisdom comes forth.

BE CURIOUS about what emerges in the group. Make an effort to understand first rather than pre-judge yourself or others. It is said that in the mind of the expert there are very few possibilities, but in a childlike mind there are infinite possibilities because the moment is welcomed with curiosity. Be open to not knowing; this is often referred to as 'beginner's mind'. Throughout our sessions, even when something seems familiar, rather than lean on your past experiences and assumptions, do your best to stay present and curious.

BE RESPECTFUL of others within and outside our sessions. Each of us has a unique perspective, and we don't have to agree with, or like, what others share about their experience. This approach asks us to respect people's privacy; do not share information about other group members outside our sessions. Confidentiality is so important! Speak about your experience, not about anyone else's.

USE "I" STATEMENTS when sharing your experience and take responsibility for your process. It often happens that people share their personal experience using "we" and "you" language. If this comes up, you may be invited to reframe your phrases using "I" statements. This can feel more vulnerable, but with practice "I" statements will support you to take ownership and accountability for your experience and lead you to a greater sense of empowerment.